The Pension Office in a Demoralized and Distraught Condition.

Washington special to the New York World: The air here is full of rumors about a scandalous state of affairs in the pension office. brought with him from Brooklyn. As soon as Mr. Squires was dismissed the story got out that it was on account of discrimina-ing against other attorneys in favor of George E. Lemon, a pension attorney, and Commissioner Tanner did not at first deny the charge. An army of Brooklyn politithe charge. An army of Brooklyn politi-cians, friends of Squires, began to show their indignation against Tanner for what they supposed was the sacrifice of Squires for the deliberate purpose of giving the po-sition to Tanner's own daughter. When Squires' friends began to put this serious face on the matter Tanner opened his mouth very wide and, declaring that he would no longer hide the truth, said that Mr. Squires had to be dismissed because. would no longer hide the truth, sain that Mr. Squires had to be dismissed because,
in letters to a pension office cierk, Mrs.
Friend, a widow of forty years old, he had made propositions of a compromising character. In view of the circumstances attending Mr. Squires' removal Mr. Tanner thought he could not do a safer thing than to appoint his own daughter to the than to appoint his own daughter to the

Mr. Tanner's friends it was not the pres dent and it was not Commissioner Tanne that was the immediate cause of Squire removal. The widow was about to be dis-missed as an undesirable person, and when she found this out she tried to save herself However, it is not in the fact that this by playing upon Squire's weakness. So she went to Secretary of the Interior Noble and placed on his desk four compromising in the character of the inhabitants that came here. These were mostly from the Carolinas and Tennessee. They brought with them the peculiarities of their home life, and were as primitive in their ideas of tabor as they were tacking in the spirit of progress. To-day they remain practically as they were upon their arrival here. Little as done by them except the practice of a priculture in a fashion that is altogether behind the times. Even such crops as they cerned, which he iliustrated by declaring that she had even tried to draw himself into her net, he succeeded in persuading Secretary Noble to appoint Squires and inspector of timber in the far west, where there are not supposed to be so many designing widows for men to beware of.

Squires is gone, but Mrs. Friend still holds her place in the pension office. She is retained, it is said, because Senator Dawes and Henry Cabot Lodge have both wired Secretary Noble urging her retention.

The morals of the pension office are apparently at a low level. It is said that the reason for the sudden departure of another Brooklyn man from the pension office was Secretary Noble's discovery that the fellow had deserted his wife and fam-lly, and had taken up with a woman in this city, and had been mean enough to dis-sipate the woman's money and pawn her
